Jano is a Roman god with two faces. One looks to the past and another to the future. He is also considered the god of beginnings and the endings. In "La otra cara de Jano", author Pierre Bourdieu uses the image of this god to represent the two facets of the work of an editor that, although they seem opposed, are, in fact, complementary and necessary. These facets are: understanding books as cultural objects but also as commodities. From this perspective, he studies the publishing industry in Latin American from the 20th century until the present day. Contents include: "Panoramas", "Estudios" and "Conexos".

In a city without a name, a group of disenchanted young adults begin a movement to go back to nature: they abandon their children and go to live in the woods. Some time later, deer in the area begin to behave strangely and aggressively. "América alucinada" tells the story of three characters: Berenice, a girl apparently abandoned by her mother; Beryl, a former hippie ex-wife who founded a hunting club to eliminate deer; And Vik, an immigrant who discovers that a woman has been hiding in his house for days. Featuring complex and endearing character and a high-tension narrative, award-winning author Betina González's novel reflects on the rupture of solidarity in today's capitalistic society and a disturbing commentary about our collective utopias. González is also the author of "Arte Menor" (Premio Clarín Novela 2006), "Juegos de playa" (2012) and "Las poseídas" (Premio Tusquets Editores de Novela 2012).

"Apegos feroces" is a memoir by Vivian Gornick that portrays her relationship with her mother in an honest, raw way. Gornick, 45, describes how she walks with her elderly mother through the streets of Mahattan. Full of reproaches and memories, she struggles to find her own place in the world. From an early age, she was influenced by two very different female models: one, that of her mother, a neurotic, stubborn, and intelligent woman who devoted all her energy to the care of her family, and who placed love at the center of her existence; and the other, that of Nettie, a young, passionate, inexperienced neighbor, a widow and mother of a baby, who only feels safe in front of men, aware of her own sensuality. Both shape her relationship with men, work, and other women for the rest of her life. This work, originally published in 1987, is a portrait of a society and an era, as well as a meditation on the experience of being a woman.

"La ilusión de los mamíferos" is a passionate, sweet, ambiguous, and painful story of the meeting of two men, repeated Sunday after Sunday in a small apartment. From there they look out over the balcony, which unfolds into a majestic horizon of trees and buildings in a poor and foolish Buenos Aires. The days that separate them, those of the week, which human beings dedicate to work and family, come swiftly. And then they return to the day of delivery and celebration, of sex and conversations with few words, a feast that both satiates and despairs. In this delicate and intense novel, author Julián López encourages these characters to persist in their journey toward the hearts of others. Because it is only in that search in the dark that the meaning of life is revealed.

"Todo nada" tells the story of a renowned, now elderly gastroenterologist named Emilio Nassar, and his goal: to let himself die of hunger. He confides his plan to his young granddaughter, Emilia, with whom he shared long coffee talks before passing away. Affected by the loss, and engrossed in a turbulent love relationship, Emilia is dedicated to rebuilding the last months she shared with her grandfather. Through this process, Emilia recalls the lively and moving monologues of all those who, despite their suicidal determination, always had a memory or revelation to share; she also reflects upon the nonsense of affection.

"Al final, las palabras" is a romantic novel that takes place in three different periods, only surviving through a manuscript that has passed down from hand to hand, a manuscript that recounts the friendship and the adventures of a group of youths who are leaving behind childhood in Mexico City at the beginning of the 20th century. The narrative illustrates their picturesque life of the capital and Pegote and Ofelia's discovery of love. But the couple is disrupted when Ophelia moves with her family to Paris. After a long time apart, in the mid-seventies, she decides to hire Jesus Rivera to investigate the whereabouts of her former boyfriend. The narrative then focuses on Pegote's life in the meantime; Finally, Rivera's manuscript and research fall into the hands of José Álvez, a writer who finds in Ophelia and Pegote's story a reason to look back on his own history.

"Lanús" is a novel that follows Francisco, who has traveled from Lanús to the center of Buenos Aires, fleeing the police with 1,000 pesos, which he stole to pay for his girlfriend's abortion. He calls his old friend Adrián, who lives in the capital and works as a designer, for help. But Adrián listens to the message too late, and only the memory of an old pact pushes him to return to his old neighborhood to investigate the disappearance of Francisco. There he finds old friends, with whom he reminisces about football matches, fights between bands, and the afternoons in which they played games. Now, however, he discovers clandestine businesses, stories of violence, and threats in a neighborhood dominated by the local mafia. Adrián risks exposing shady affairs while trying to bring order to his emotional life. This work is above all a very agile story, full of twists and turns, on fidelity, betrayal, reunions, and new loves, with doses of humor. First Alfaguara edition. The novel first came out in 2002, the second edition was published in 2008 and in 2009 it was translated into German.

"El tren pasa primero" tells the story of a man who was born in southern Mexico. He had never left the town, but one day the train passed, and in the noise of that machine he heard the story of his life; He experienced an indomitable desire for knowledge that would push him beyond his limits. And indeed, the train led to everywhere: places he never imagined, bodies of knowledge, new skills, people and possibilities. It also led to the instant he began speaking to his railroad companions with such ardor and conviction that he turned them into the vanguard of the worker's struggle. And together, they stopped the country and the regime. Written by celebrated Mexican author and journalist Elena Poniatowska, winner of the 2001 Alfaguara Prize for "La piel del cielo." "Pantaletas! Confesiones sentimentales del estudiante Maciosare" is a humorous novel that portrays an irreverent vision of life in Mexico City. Maciosare, an underprivileged sociology graduate, is trying to survive in the chaos of a city that's cutting social reforms and economic benefits for the lower classes. Inspired by his striving and idealistic family and by his girlfriend's voluptuous body, Maciosare becomes a designer and vendor of oversized women's undergarments. From the podium of his store, he tells readers about the son he had with his girlfriend and about the time she eloped to Los Angeles with another man. Using popular songs and phrases, soap opera dialogue and newspaper chronicles, Ramirez creates a multilayered narrative that focuses on the daily life of Mexico City's working class, and their struggles and tragedies.

"La expansión del universo" is a novel that begins one summer afternoon in Pinamar, when protagonist Federico decides to venture beyond the limits his grandparents set for his bicycle rides. In his quest for adventure, he discovers a dead man among the trees. Although it's the 80s, the signs of past violence such as this one still float to the surface. Fast forward to when he is an adult living in Barcelona, Federico attempts to understand what happened next, and why life unfolded in the way it did: his grandfather's obsession, his mother's silence, his father's reticence and his uncle's mysterious behavior. Above all, Federico faces a mystery that reappears in his photos and memories. This narrative explores the generation that grew up during the dictatorship, experienced its consequences, and adapted to the dark and paranoid world they inherited.

This fictional narrative is named after Mexicoland, a perfect place that features the best of Mexico in one place: its history, music, and food. But everything is false; it's an amusement park in the future, while the rest of the country has collapsed with violence and anarchy. Only a small territory called New Mexico remains, leading to a society in which any crime is punished with extreme cruelty. It's there that Cuauhtémoc Rojo is left without parents, school, and home in a single day. He soon discovers that if he wants to survive, he needs to find answers: who are those strange elders who watch over him? What actually happened to his parents? And most of all, what's hidden behind the huge walls that surround the cities?

In a dilapidated building in the city of Mexico, a group of elderly people spends their days on neighborhood feuds and literary pursuits. Teo, the narrator and protagonist of this story, is seventy-eight years old and has an unhealthy fixation to Adorno's Aesthetic Theory, which he believes solves all kinds of domestic problems. He and his gentleman friends' main concerns are keeping track of the drinks they order to fully extend their dwindling savings, writing in a notebook and calculating the possibilities of taking women to bed. Their routine life breaks with the emergence of youth, embodied by Willem, Mao and Dorotea, granddaughter of one of the group's elderly ladies."Te vendo un perro" tells the story of the forgotten, the unlucky, the marginalized, and the street dogs.

Third novel of the Mexican writer Juan Pablo Villalobos (1973).

"El oído miope" centers around Cristina, a young Colombian lawyer who loses her job and decides to emigrate to New York. But her New York dream does not look like her reality: she shares a bunk bed with an eight-year-old boy, has no papers, and cleans houses to survive. She records the details of her days, including her correspondence with her mother and friends in Colombia, work, English classes, and personal exploration of a city as hostile as it is fascinating. This enveloping novel explores loneliness and about the primitive drive of the human being to look for herself in other worlds.

"Historia, antihistoria e insularidad en la novela latinoamericana" analyzes the colonial period in Latin America through seven contemporary novels. Author Carolyn Wolfenzon specifically examines the relationship between the region's past and present, and the idea that the novels maintain a permanent dialogue with the colonial past, giving the perception that time is stagnant and circular, or ahistorical. Wolfenzon draws examples from the work of Antonio di Benedetto (Argentina), Carmen Boullosa (México), Reinaldo Arenas (Cuba), Enrique Rosas Paravicino (Perú) and Abel Posse (Argentina).
