"Pecho frio" is a controversial and direct novel by Jaime Bayly that explores the place of homosexuality in Latin American society, challenging the status quo with humor and satire. The work centers on Pecho Frio, a common man who is married, lives in Lima, Peru, and works as a banker. He doesn't live a very exciting life, but also doesn't have anything to complain about -- that is, until the day he decides to compete in a TV program that offers him the opportunity to win a luxurious trip. All he has to do is a seemingly simple thing: kiss the host of the program. Reluctant, but also eager to claim his prize, he accepts the challenge, and before he even realizes it, he finds himself intertwining with another man, while everything is recorded on live television. A series of, one would say unfortunate events begins to unfold. His marriage breaks down, his colleagues reject him, and the ever-conservative Latin American society in which he lives turns him into a fool. But there is one advantage: he becomes the face of a LGBT organization and, somehow, his life turns toward the unexpected.

"La tarde de toros" is a novel narrated by Nesho, a child storyteller who explores a world in which rivers, stars, flora and fauna awaken the gift of going beyond the senses. Nesho's innocent soul paves the way to myths and legends, which are woven into a turbulent and mysterious present. Thorough this narrative, author Óscar Colchado Lucio reveals the spirit of the Andean people and the immortal desire to realize the universal dreams of freedom and justice. When Nesho finishes telling his story at the conclusion of a bullfight, readers understand the winds of change brought by the mid-twentieth century, and the uncertain future they created.

Finding love in a city full of social rules can be a cruel exercise; that's why Gustavo expected to find everything but happiness in a lover. Lali, his wife, can tolerate certain adventures as long as they do not break the marital routine of a high society couple. While each of them meets the necessary requirements for what the other wants, they will inevitably transgress the thin line that divides happiness from misfortune. "La segunda amante del rey" is a vibrant novel about desire, emotional yearning and interrogations that take place in a violent city in which love can be a liquidated merchandise sold to the highest bidder, or a ghost that never stops snooping around the rooms of memory.

"Algún día este país será mío" is a novel in which a Peruvian writer residing in Spain decides to write a confessional novel about his past grudges. The epicenter of these memories is his ill-fated friendship with Zeta, who, unlike him, knew how to climb positions in Peru thanks to a turbid political career. The recount of their experiences over two decades illustrates a climate of violence, discrimination, and corruption of a society lost in its contradictions. The story also becomes a portrait of a childhood subjected to vexation, prejudice, and artificial paradises -- the prelude to an adult life that is torn between frustration, resignation, and debasement.

"Cia Perú, 1990. El espía innoble" is a political novel that takes place after Alberto Fujimori wins the 1990 elections in Peru; at his side is the shadowy figure of an ex-military man named Vladimiro Montesinos. Speculation begins to surround him -- Who is this man, who in a short time has permeated the highest spheres of power? A traitor? A spy? A drug trafficker? The uncertainty traces its way to Malko Linge, a sophisticated intelligence agent commissioned by the CIA to solve the enigma of Montesinos. However, Linge will have to watch his steps, because Montesinos's gaze has already settled on him, and he does not intend to let anyone stand in his way.

*"Las orillas del aire" takes place in 1940, when a woman disappears in a lake while teaching her children how to swim. Her death leaves a trail mystery and her memory is mixed with the cruelty and myths of the world that surrounded her. Many years later, a stone cat from a pre-Hispanic site that was mutilated by looters and an unexpected find in a cemetery begin to unleash memories and stories that also seem to have been submerged along with the woman. Through the explorations of an archaeologist in the jungle and the mystery of the drowned woman, this work travels through the inner passages of Peruvian history over the last century. Written by Karina Pacheco Medrano, who is also the author of "El bosque de tu nombre", "Cabeza y orquideas", "La sangre, el polvo, la nieve", "No olvides nuestros nombres", "La voluntad del molle", "Miradas. In "Guerras del interior", an award-winning book of journalistic chronicles, Edwin Chota returns to his Ashaninka roots to fight illegal logging in the Amazonian community of Saweto, until he is killed by gunmen. Máxima Acuña, a farmer and shepherdess in the Andes of Cajamarca, is reluctant to abandon what she considers her property, despite the presence of the Conga mining project, which seeks to extract gold in the same place. Osman Cuñachí, an eleven year old, appears to be bathed in oil in a photo that travels the world and provides proof of a spill that contaminated the Nazareth community, and the river where the Awajún swam and fished. Through these real-life narratives, author Joseph Zarate seeks to denounce the social, economic, political, and environmental wars that wreaked havoc in the interior of Peru. They also illuminate the personal, psychological, and emotional wars of men and women who defend and preserve their lands, customs, and identities.

"Nueva crónica y buen gobierno" is a Peruvian chronicle from approximately 1615. Its creator, indigenous Peruvian Felipe Guaman Poma de Ayala, sent the handwritten manuscript to King Philip III of Spain for two reasons: to give a historical account of the Andes from the earliest human beings to the Incas and the Spanish conquest, and to draw attention to regional problems caused by the Spanish government. The volumes chronicle ancient Andean history, the rise of the Incan empire, Spanish conquest in the 1530s, and early colonial society and government. It also describes pre-colonial religion, social order, legislation, celebrations and economic organization, as well as the functions of the different social groups. Includes the complete facsimile of Felipe Guaman Poma de Ayala's original manuscripts, including illustrations.

In 1986, when the power structure of the post-oligarchic period was being organized, the Peruvian press coined the term "Twelve Apostles", referring to the twelve largest businessmen who were summoned by President Alan García to discuss the course the country should take. Since then it has become customary to speak of the Twelve Apostles when discussing the heads of the largest and strongest Peruvian companies. However, due to the changes that the country, the economy and the economic elite have experienced in recent decades, it is necessary to re-identify these figures and present a clearer and more accurate image of the "apostles" of the 21st century. In "Los doce apóstoles de la economía Peruana", author Francisco Durand presents a detailed analysis of the country's trajectory of economic, political and social power, and of the twelve most influential Peruvian economic power groups (PGE). Moreover, he examines how they wield their enormous wealth to influence public policy decisions and political campaigns.

How did the indigenous people of the Andes feel during the Conquest and the first decades of colonization? This pioneering study by French historian Nathan Wachtel, "Sociedad e Ideología: Ensayos de antropología e historia andinas", recounts history from the perspective of the vanquished, decolonizing history itself. However, it does not simply chronicle the exploitation and abuses of the indigenous people; it also delves into how their civilization was structured and the logic that motivated them, in order to better understand the meaning of their collapse. This second edition includes an extensive prologue in which Wachtel analyzes his trajectory of study in comparison with different ethnological approaches throughout history. This work is divided into four parts: "Estructuralismo e historia: A propósito de la organización social del Cuzo", "La reciprocidad y el estado Inca: de Karl Polanyi a John V. Murra", "La desestructuración económica y social del mundo Andino" and "Pensamiento salvaje y aculturación: El espacio y el tiempo en Felipe Guamán Poma de Ayala y el Inca Garcilaso de la Vega".

*"Cholas" and "pishtacos" are two characters from South American popular culture -- a sensual mixed-race woman and a horrifying white killer. In "Cholas y pishtacos: Relatos de raza y sexo en los Andes", these two figures act as vehicles for an analysis of race, sex and violence, and the intersection of all three throughout the vivid landscapes and lively cities of the Andes. Author Mary Weismantel's theory of race and sex is based on social and economic interaction, specifically estrangement, exchange and accumulation. She maps the barriers that separate white and indigenous people, males and females, and more through interviews with unlikely sources -- from potato sellers to hotel maids to tourists. Contents include: "Extrañamiento", "Ciudad de indígenas", "Ciudad de mujeres", "Intercambio", "Comercio agudo", "Relaciones mortales", "Acumulación", "Hombres blancos" and "La Mama Negra".
